finally settled. A SONG OF ALEXANDRIA, VA. BY BICHARD WRIGHT. (Written November 23d, 1865.)

A few hearty friends one night jovially met, As often before, their dry whistles to wet; Their mearchaums to color, Havannas to smoke, And continue 'till midnight the song, laugh and joka.

Their confab was various, both 'foreign' and home.' To Europe, to Africa, to India they'd roam, All manners and customs and ranks they'd review, And when reals wore out, would invent something new.

Then like poor weary travellers seitling at home, Would stare at each other to see what would · For each knew that his neighbor could tell a good tale, Of some "State" or some "Town," over toddy Inhabitants showed forth a beauty so rare, And so like the "houries" of Mahomet's Heav'n, That the town was by nem con christened Belle Haven.

And again, the love-matches were made up so quick, That the parsons to marry had all to be slick; And the church bells rang jingling from morning to night, Marriage-bells I truly proving the town was named right. What a discord here arose-clashing arguments strong, As both the disputants debate would prolong At its ' hammer and tongs"-to the right and the left, Striving like two knight-errants which one should be cleft. Till up jumps number THREE, as a peacemaker good, Crying, gentlemen, gentlemen, pray don't draw blood; But listen to me-I've a third name to give. Quite true and appropriate as sure as you live.

Suppose we submerge the three names into one, And thus we may bid all discord be gone. Now what do you think of a name we may call,

A name that has ever been dear to us all, The name of "OLD TOWN" -on Potomac's own stream So often illumed by the sun's brightest beam.

And if ever again a dispute should arise-Alexandria"-Belle Haven"-"Rogue's Harbor" to prize, Let "THE OLD TOWN" be welcomed with warm heart and tongue, For in loving "THE OLD TOWN" we cannot go wrong.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE .- The enthusiam evoked for woman suffrage a few months ago has singularly and almost completely died out. The Constitutional Conventions of New York and Michigan have both decided against making female suffrage a political issue. In the first the Committee on Suffrage, headed by no less Radical a person than Horace Greeley, reported emphatically against it, and the Michigan Convention, which was believed to contain a strong element in favor of the innovation, voted squarely against it when the test was made. It will be many years before American women will have either the right or the inclination to participate in the stormy battles of politics. to the old firm. Demagogues may continue to agitate their claims, but the practical and really intelligent women of the country neither ask nor desire
